

HOW THIS DRAWING CAME TO BE

The aerial photo to the right shows the Graziani cottage (now the Community Center) during the years it housed the Clark Lake Yacht Club sometime after 1933. The Graziani family also owned a vacant lot immediately adjacent to it, and three more cottages. The main cottage, on the point, was known as the Kentucky Homestead. The three cottages to the right were named after Kentucky counties – Kenton, Campbell, and Boone.

During the Graziani years, Carlotta Graziani Wilson, owned the first cottage to the right, Kenton. In 1967, they sold the cottage to John and Jean Kopplin. Jean's daughter, Susan Kopplin Kienholz, became inspired by the charm of the cottage, and crafted the drawing of it that you see here. The border frame is red as that was the color of the cottage when her family owned it.

Kenton. This is closest to Kentucky Point.

Campbell. Of the 3 cottages, only this one remains unwinterized.

Boone. All 3 cottages were originally of the same design and had the same floorplans.

Susan's grandparents, Herman and Josephine Melling, owned another cottage nearby from the 1920s to 1940s. Jean described that experience, and the one they acquired in 1967, in a My Clark Lake Story on ClarkLakeSpirit.com. Under Historical Perspectives, you can read Carlotta Graziani's story. Both stories are loaded with treasured details of life at Clark Lake in earlier days.
